Less than 600 short, but intense days separate us from the start of the 2016 Olympic Games in Rio de Janeiro. Packed in the middle are 10 World Cups (7 ISSF & 3 IPC), Pan American Games, World Championship (shotgun) and all the drama of domestic qualification and selection. From it will emerge the USA Shooting's Olympic and Paralympic representatives. To get you prepared, we're laying out the targets ahead as Rio comes into sight.

Quotas

The first step is earning the right as a country to compete in each of the 15 Olympic and 12 Paralympic events through country quotas. Seven of them have been nabbed thus far with five Olympic (Double Trap, Men's & Women's Skeet, men's air pistol & rifle) and two Paralympic (mixed sport pistol, mixed standing air rifle). Twenty-five more Olympic and 10 Paralympic quotas remain available and will be earned through 2015 competition. Additional quota places can be obtained at the Pan American Games

(20), the World Clay Target Championship (10), seven ISSF World Cups that will include 136 total quotas, and three IPC World Cups that contain 27 available spots.

Becoming an Olympian/ Paralympian

Individual selection for the Olympic Games will come via two different paths, either by the Olympic Points System or Olympic Team Selection Competitions. A point system will be used again giving athletes the opportunity to earn points by virtue of their finishes at 2015 World Cups,

World Champs, World Cup Final and designated Selection Competitions. After the 2015 World Cup Final, the athlete with the most points, and thus the highest ranked in each event, who meets or exceeds the point threshold of 25 points (Rifle/Pistol) and 30 points (Shotgun) and has earned at least one medal at a 2015 World Cup competition, World Cup Finals (rifle & pistol only) or World Championships (shotgun only), will be nominated to the Olympic Team depending upon quotas earned in each event.

Olympic Team Selection

Competitions will consist of multiple courses of fire as defined in the table above. If there are no Olympic Points System winners in an event, all team members will be determined by the Olympic Team Selection Competitions up to the number of quotas earned in the respective event.
